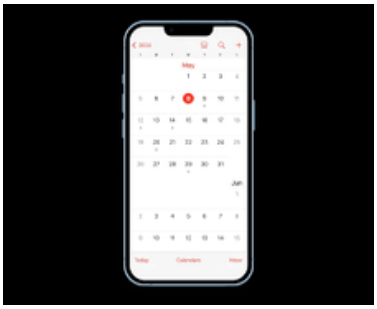
Joan is a school teacher who keeps forgetting her lesson plans at home and is backed up on grading because she can't focus.



She has tried using the calander app on her phone to remind her of deadlines but nothing seems to work.

Shes on tiktok and she hears about this new app called FocusHub for people with ADHD and decides she wants to try it out.

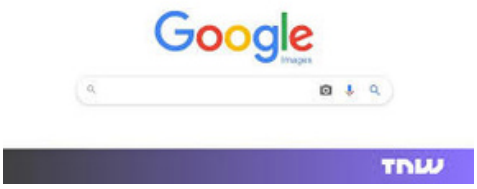
She is excited because she finds out the app reminds her multiple times for each deadline, helping her be more accountable.

She later found out the app allows for a "focus mode" to be setup to avoid distractions. This is different than do not disturb because it gives her a prompt before going on an app saying "are you sure you want to stop" and then stating the task that she has set up for it to say

She is so happy she found this app because it allows her to keep herself accountable even with her own struggles and allows her to best serve her students and her passion for teaching.

Lucy is a college student that has a lot of trouble staying on task while doing homework and is constantly forgetting deadlines, appointments, and hangout times with friends

Lucy strives for good grades and maintaining good friendships, but she is starting to get overwhelmened with assignments and forgetting hangout times with friends.



She starts looking up apps that will help remind her and help her stay focused while doing assignments but all of the apps she finds are either too complicated or they aren't helpful to her

She then stumbles along this app called FocusHub which has everything she could ever need in it.

She starts aceing her classes because the constant reminders were exactly what she needed to help remind her about her assignments coming up.

The clean design allowed her to easily use the app and made it more comforting to her and she's so grateful she found it.

Susie is a grandmother who has been diagnosed with dementia.

She is constantly forgetting to take her pills or if she did take them or not.

Susie's son has been looking for an app that she can use at her age to help remind her to take her pills, and also track when she takes them.

He starts setting up FocusHub to use for Susie and see's how easy to use it is.

He likes how the app gives consistant notification reminders to Susie every 15 minutes from when she is supposed to take her meds so that if she gets side tract or doesn't have them, she wont forget.

He also likes that after she takes the medication she checks off that she took it and allows her to look back so that she knows if she took her medication or not that day.
